The C. N. James Cabin (now an Augusta Historical Museum building) in Augusta is a log structure in the frontier style of architecture. The rectangular building measures approximately 35 feet long and 20 feet wide and is two stories in height. The building is constructed of rough hewn logs chinked with mortar. The logs are roughly squared and interlock at the corners. The interlocking corner logs are notched so that they rest in each other and leave only a small space between logs. The roof is a steep gable covered with wood shingles. The roof overhangs the wall below with a simple soffit and a plain cornice. The end walls at the gable are covered with horizontal clapboard siding painted green. A massive stone chimney is located on the west end and runs exposed on the outside of the building. Windows on the first floor and the gable end are narrow rectangles of the four pane double-hung sash type. The logs of the walls form the window sills and the lintels. The second floor windows along the sides are small and square and are not operable. These are located up under the roof overhang. All window trim is painted green to match the clapboard siding. The main entrance is on the east end.

The building was altered extensively over the years but was later restored to a condition much like the original. It is now used as a museum.

A modern metal museum building has been constructed about six feet south of the cabin. A flat-roofed concrete block passage now connects the two buildings at the southwest corner of the cabin and provides controlled access to the cabin.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The C. N. James cabin, now known as the Augusta Historical Museum, was originally built as a store and home in 1868. It was the first building erected on land which later became the townsite of Augusta. The builder was Chester N. James, a merchant from Council Grove who moved to Butler county in the spring of 1868 to establish a trading post with his partner, William F. Shamleffer. Construction of the 20- by 35-foot long structure was started shortly after James' arrival, and the business was opened in July, 1868. The James family made their home on the second floor until the summer of 1869; the lower floor contained the store.

C. N. James was prominent in the development of the Augusta community. He was instrumental in the organization of Augusta township and in the incorporation of the town of Augusta, both of which were named after his wife. He also served as the town's first mayor and first postmaster.

On the upper floor of the log building the Baptists held the first church services in the community in 1869; the local Methodists organized in 1870, using the same facilities. Under James' leadership the first Masonic lodge in the county was established in the upper room of his store. In 1868 the first district school at Augusta was organized and classes were held on the second floor of James' building from 1868 to 1870; the first teacher was L. N. Blood, a clerk in James' store.

Over the years the James store had various uses and was somewhat altered. In the 1880's the log exterior was covered with siding and a flat roof replaced the original gable roof. In the late 1930's the Augusta Historical Society was organized, and in January, 1939, that group purchased the James building for $350 to use as a museum. During the next two years money was raised to renovate the old log structure. The project, beginning in January, 1941, included removing the siding, reconstructing the gabled roof, chinking between the logs and adding a cement foundation. Restoration was completed that summer and open house was held June 22, 1941. Antiques and furnishings typical of the period when the James family occupied the house are now part of the museum.

- 8. The C. N. James store is important to the people of the Augusta community because it is the oldest and most significant historical structure in their town. The man who erected the building not only founded the town but also contributed greatly to its development. The building, by serving as the center of activity during the early years of the settlement, has assisted and shared in the growth of the community. It is also a good example of frontier log cabin architecture and is one of the few remaining two story log structures in the state.
